The Garden That Is Different

GOOD GARDENS are made only with strong, vigorous plants. These we offer at HILDEMERE. Advice as to selection and culture freely given.

Today I had an understanding hour Wherein I saw, as with new gift of power, The lovely opening petals of a flower.

Fragrance and form and hue combine and cling Around its golden-stamened wedding ring, Wherefrom shall many another flower spring.

Men harbor thoughts of death and doom; But I can never wholly yield to gloom, Watching gay flowers in generations bloom.

Today, by wonder of the flower taught, Bright vision through a child's clear eyes I caught: The lovelier opening petals of a thought.

Color and form can hold but for a space A blossom's contour, or a thoughtful face; Then these escape into some freer place.

Many there are who mourn that we must go, That flowers must fade. I am not troubled so, Watching high thoughts through generations grow.

So do I share infinities of power; So do I live in hope's immortal hour; So have I seen all beauty in a flower.
